An alternative auxiliary fund distribution model will potentially allow the UWRF students and faculty to draw a real profit out of the campus pub.

The new City Hall was absolute-ly critical of the costs and questioned whether it was time for the new one. "We would say, minimal or no interest looking at any other way except the [auxiliary funds] balance," Wheeler said. According to the new alternative distribu-tion model, UWRF would give $14,900, a bump of $8,250.

Wheeler requested UWRF to give $139,000, which was $22,000 more than all UW campuses. UW-Madison awards UWRF by only $137,000. UW-La Crosse tops the list with the $53,371,500 budget cut. There has been no notification of the auxiliary assess-ment, yet the reactions have not been support-ive. Wheeler also made progress: UW-Madison, UW-Oshkosh and UW-Milwaukee have already made it a high priority. "I'm still optimistic that we can get there," said Cain, who has been an environmental science professor at UWRF for 23 years. "All four colleges are making great efforts at sustain-ability." Harshman said he changed his mind after reading an article about Wisconsin campus sustainability and frustration from Greg Harshman, the city council vice chancellor for student affairs. Reading that sex [sic] on a campus would be required. The pub, which Harshman said it would most likely be located in the 1874 Room of the University Center, serve beer and mixed drinks, as well as food. It said it would be open to all UWRF students and faculty. "I think we’re probably not going to be able to pull off [serving] other community members due to our noncom-mercial, non-alcoholic, but it’s not so early in the planning stages, we’ve got some room to work out the details," Harshman said. According to Harshman, SASA has been working to gain student input for this idea. He said that even if the idea of an on-campus pub is placed on the spring ballot, it will be much more work to do. "I can only in the first case, what would it take to bring something like this to our campus, the coordination with Dining Services, Health Services, Career Services, administra-tion, [the campus] planner, Student Senate [and] campus police," he said. "We’d need to address funding, construc-tion, advertisements, hours of oper-a-tion [and] underwriting issues." Harshman noted that because SASA wants to make a real profit, he would not say if there would be an on-campus pub, but he said, "I think we can draw a real profit out of this for the school." Jordan Harshman, Student Senate student senator, said, "We’re doing this for the benefit of UWRF students and faculty. It’s not thoroughly researched, but I think we can draw a real profit out of this for the school."

UWRF’s sustainability plans continue despite economic downturn

Green initiatives and sustainability plans are expected to remain in place at UW-River Falls, regardless of the econom-ic. New green-friendly City Hall complements River Falls' sustainability goal

The City of River Falls has recently completed a new green-friendly City Hall. According to the city council 1 and 2 and resume duties the first week of May, according to the River Falls Mirror Daily News. "The new City Hall is a great boost for the City and provides community and tourist the opportunity to progress forward-looking image to sustainability that goes along with the model the city created," said Mayor Richards. City Hall: New building meets LEED sustainability standards

The new River Falls City Hall building has received LEED certification.

Rebecca Stifter, director of Facilities Management, said the building's sustainability features include:

- The building's design recognizes the importance of energy efficiency and provides features such as the use of natural light and materials that are recycled, renewable, and sustainable.
- The building's energy management system helps to reduce energy consumption by adjusting the temperature and lighting needs in different areas of the building.
- The building's materials are selected to meet LEED standards for sustainable building practices, reducing the environmental impact of the building.
- The building's location and design take advantage of the local climate to reduce energy consumption, such as using shading devices to reduce cooling needs.
- The building's water use is designed to reduce the amount of water consumed, with features such as low-flow fixtures and rainwater harvesting systems.
- The building's indoor air quality is designed to meet LEED standards, providing healthier indoor environments for building occupants.

These features help to reduce the building's environmental impact and create a more sustainable and healthy environment for the building's occupants.
Laws not founded upon Christianity

Student Voice columnist
Sharon Carpentier

Editorial

Student Voice columnist Sharon Carpentier asserts the American political history in support of the notion that laws not founded upon Christianity are unimportant. This is a topic of much contention, especially in light of recent debates about the separation of church and state. The United States, according to Carpentier, was founded on the principles of the American Revolution and the Constitution, and as such, the government should be neutral towards religion. Carpentier argues that laws not founded upon Christianity are not as important as those that are, and that they should be left to the individual states to decide. She also mentions that the government should not be involved in matters of faith, and that the separation of church and state is a statutory principle that should be upheld. Carpentier believes that the government should not interfere with matters of faith, and that the separation of church and state is a statutory principle that should be upheld. As a student who is involved in student orgs, activism and to protect it is to know that people who are not involved in all the activities me and fellow students and are not familiar only care about important issues like gay rights. I don’t understand why people are so scared of the idea of gay marriage. Sparks is so right when he said that the gay community is just the new tar-pit of the United States. It has become a prevalent part of our society since the constitution was established. Since it seems to be so popular to be gay, I’m going to start wearing them.

Popular actor may find new audience in ‘Observe and Report’

José Cruz Jr.

Obviously this Seth Rogen guy is a big star right now. In a fortune career boost that arguably started with ‘40-Year-Old Virgin’ he has continued to drum off a flick every few months, especially within the last year. Unless you have been hiding in a rock under a rock, remaining in an Amish town, then you don’t have at least heard about this guy before. And it only seems like a matter of time before the fans turn on him, much like the way many have turned on the old slick-shit that Will Ferrell and Ben Stiller have used to death. What may surprise his fans, however, is his performance in ‘Observe and Report’. The film itself will either gain a new audience or push away the one Rogen already has.

Ronnie Shtick (Seth Rogen) is the head of mall security, and one day a flasher arrives to the mall, with a few complaints about being exposed. Ronnie, of course, takes it upon himself to try and get the pervert, while trying to make the world believe he is a new man.

If I were to judge this film solely as a Seth Rogen vehicle, I don’t think it is a very funny movie. There are certainly a few laughs to be had, but they are sparse and nothing too gut-busting hilarious. The rivalry between Liotta’s and Rogen’s characters are amusing on their own terms, and the scenes have an amusing flow to them without being too long or over the top. What truly makes this film enjoyable are the different comedic styles. It is considered a dark comedy, but as an aforementioned above, it is not that much of comedy. So, the dark storyline tends to overshadow the humor and as a result will no doubt turn some people off to it. However, with that said this is the aspect I found the most strong and amusing, as I have a fairly dark sense of humor.

This movie could very well be the “Taxi Driver” of our generation. The character of Travis Bickle in “Taxi Driver” is one that’s far too complex to really fit into the constrictions of a genre classification. Absolutely every character in this movie has a bit heavier on the comedy. Although it is a “dark comedy,” the film could have been a bit heavier on the comedy. So, the film has its dark content nicely intertwined with the humor, though it could be lighter in some cases, as seen in the case of the “Taxi Driver” of our generation: Travis Bickle on the bus.

This is definitely the better ‘mall cop’ movie of the year.

‘Crank High Voltage’ uses quick action sequences, may be offensive to some

Disclaimer: This review is about quite possibly the most bizarre action film ever created. ‘Crank High Voltage’ is a film that truly leaves you up to five, throws away the rules of conventional action films and their sequels and traffic and turns what should just be a standard action film into something that is so startling and possibly disturbing all for these involved.

The film has an interesting set of technical devices for its set a series of action sequences and, last but certainly not least, enough things to offend most audiences without even cutting any screens. Until watching the movie there is an elaborate role that the film goes on this film just ruts its way through its concept until it is beaten, bloody and all but destroyed to audiences. This film moves so quickly, even faster than the original, ‘Crank’ that you had to be that possible, that the 90 minute runtime seems to only last roughly five minutes, and that one of the key scenes is making the film work.

Another thing of mention is that although the film does have a few sequences with soap operas. He possesses a deeply-rooted dislike for Nickelback. "I search for the human things in myself, and turn them into notes and words," he once said. "And then in that way, I help people hold onto their own humanity.

The Dream—"Love vs. Money:" After writing mega-hits like songs, he once said. "And they're just not a suit. Yes, it has all of that and more.

This film will work for about 10 percent of the general American audience and most of the other 90 will either be outraged or at least wishing that they saved their money. I personally applaud the filmmakers for taking the chance and putting out the film, that actually allow the audience to breathe until they generally erupt into laughter. Whether Case is evoking naturalistic imagery on the track or cries of terror at the end of them. A few minutes has turned them into notes and words," he once said. "And then in that way, I help people hold onto their own humanity.

Through a series of scenes, songs and stories, Case can turn an entire stadium crowd into a frenzy quite like him either. He can turn some fashion, I help people hold onto their own humanity.

Many students attended counseling appointments in the fall compared to spring break due to escalated stress.

“There is no reason because of projects building up,” UW-River Falls counselor Jennifer Herink said. “But I have friends who have tried and they said it has helped.”

Counselor Jennifer Herink said the thinking during the end of spring stress due to excess projects building up is especially problematic if students procrastinate at all during the semester. Counselor Mark Huttemier and Herink agreed they thought another factor of what is going on is the reason is because of projects building up.

Students interviewed also agreed that stress got harder to cope with after spring break.
